

Our two daughters ages 2 and 3 started La Petite Ecole last fall. Before they started this pre-school, I had a very traditional view about raising children. I always believed that one of the parents should stay home with the children, if possible. I learned from my neighbor about La Petite Ecole, but was skeptical. I didn't want just to shove my children off to some daycare or pre-school. After visiting the school and talking to Patricia I was intrigued.

After the first couple of weeks we knew, we made the right decision. Our girls made great advances in speech, interaction with other children and scholarly skills. Patricia has great patience, adjusts well to each individual child's ability and has a great resource of material to teach our children social and educational goals. Patricia also provides a loving home environment where the children eat together, play together, but still follows a pre-school curriculum. And with help of her husband Alex and her adult-children, she can provide extra activities such as physical education and field trips.

I can't say anything but great things about La Petite Ecole. And I would suggest that school to any parents with pre-school aged children.
