

My daughter started at La Petite Ecole just six months ago. Prior to that she had been going to traditional "daycare." She was stressed, unhappy, and always sick. We set off on a mission to find a better place for her to learn. I found La Petite Ecole by accident through the school where I study French. I called, spoke with her, and she let me "try out" the school for a week. My daughter was so happy at the end of that week that we immediately enrolled her for the following school year.

In the past six months, she has flourished into a very loving, compassionate, and well-spoken little girl. She loves Patricia and all of the children who attend the school. Her French has progressed exponentially and she often sings to us French songs. She even tries to teach children older than her how to speak in French.

Patricia is wonderful. She provides healthy, home-cooked meals in a very warm and inviting environment. It is "all about the children" at her school. She is organized and the curriculum is well thought out. I love the field trips and believe they give the children exposure to things they would not normally get in a traditional daycare.

I would recommend Patricia and La Petite Ecole to anyone who has a preschool-aged child and is looking for a loving, enriching environment where the children are allowed to express themselves and are encouraged to be creative. Without a doubt, Patricia has a true passion for the children and her school.
